PLEASANTON "WHAT-IS-IT" BAFFLES NILES POLOISTS

Pleasantons' Celebration Draws Multitude July Fourth

A hundred or more Niles peoplo, intent on witnessing a real Fourtth of July celebration, Tuesday spent the day at Pleasanton, amid bands, peanuts and parades. Zooming aeroplanes, blazes of color, and the thunder of the races gave the day a carnival touch. Pleasanton, and the arrangement committees for the occasion, are to be commended for bringing back a true festive spirit, depicted by the tired but jubilant multitude that streamed from the town at the end of the day.

Taking act've part in the program of the day, Niles entered a float in the parade. Adorned with flags and bright paint, and bearing a juvenile orchestra attired in rustic garb, the float proclaimed the interest and activiity of the Niles Chamber of Commerce and the jackass polo team.

O. W. Ebright, Niles, constable, came into modest fame when he placed fourth in the quarter-mile sheriff's race. Grabbing one of the leading positions at the start of the contest, Ebright was forced to the fence a the finish drew near. He was compelled to drop back into one of the trailing positions as they came under the wire. Ebright and Patricia Rose, both mounted on splendid horses, led the Niles contingent in the big parade of the day.

Striving like the true sportsmen they are, in the face of insuperable odds, the Niles Jackass Polo Team lost the championship to Pleasanton in a game one-sided enough to be funny. The Niles poloists were defeated 5 to 0, at the hands, or hoofs, of the Pleasanton "What-is-it," which certainly was too spry nd effective to be a jackass. Taking the ball at will, the Pleasanton terror ((looking suspiciously like a mule) tallied all of the points of the day. None of the Niles boys, try as they might, could wrest the pellet from the Pleasanton juggernaut as it dashed furiously up and down the field, scoring points at will, and making the day generally hideous for the Niles contingent. So knowing and accomplished was this Pleasanton four-footed phenomenon, that it was once observed to score a point with a deft twist of its left forehoof, then turn and wink knowingly at its rider. Although the champions were beaten, they are not down, and are already scheming to regain the crown. Perhaps they will even import some ponies from Del Monte.

Captained by the cheerful Grady Denton, the Niles team was made up by C. Andrade, Joe Ferrera and Jack Gieb.

NILES DEPARTMENT REPRESENTED AT FIREMEN MEET

Clarence Crane, Lawrence Avila and Frank Silva represented the Niles Fire Department at the Castro Valely met of the Alameda County Firemen's Association last Thursday night.

Acording to the firemen, nearly every chief in the bay region was at the meet most of them accompanied by a delegation of fire fighters.

Speaker of the evening was E. Thompson, official in the State Forestry Department, who told of what relationship exists between the state department of forestry and the reforestaion camps established by the federal government in Caliornia.

Thompson stated that the opinion that Californians were being sent to camps outside of the state was erroneous, saying that all Californians who join in the reforestation service are stationed at camps within the borders of the state. He said that other states, which lack forest areas, have sent many men to California.

Thompson said that there are 187 camps in the state manned by Californians. He spoke in some detail about the recently formed camp above Lake Chabot.

Among district reports for the evening, Clarence Crane gave an account of the acivities of the Niles unit.

Music at the meet was furnished by a Centerville orchestra conducted by Tony Cogine. Frank Madruga, Fred Rogers and Chick Santos were the Centerville representatives.

CONTINUATION OF MARKET NEWS ASSURED

Under a barrage of protest from all over the producing sections of the United States Secretary of Agriculture Wallace last Wednesday announced that the Federal-State marketing news service would not be discontinued on June 30, as was planned by the budget-control officials in an economy attempt recently.

Support of the railroads of the west did much to have the service reinstated, since blind shipping by farmers would tend to cut down total tonnage available for trausportation.

The Niles Chamber of Commerce was the first unified body in Washington township to voice protest of the proposed discontinuation. A telegram was drawn up by W. B. Kirk and E. A. Ellsworth, and was dispatched from the Niles civic body Monday of last week. The telegram contained the vigorous disapproval of the chamber to the killing of the marketing news service.

ACCEPTS CANNERY POSITION

Robert Boyer, of Niles, has recently accepted a position with the F. E. Booth Cannery as a buyer. Boyer has had experience in the fruit buying business, being formerly employed by the Shuckl Cannery at Sunnyvale in that capacity. Mr. and Mrs. Boyer will remain in Niles, where they have been living at the Hotel Belvoir.

"RING THE SIREN!" INSISTS URCHIN "NO," SAYS CARVO

"RING THE SIREN," puffed a very much disturbed urchin to the sedate Dick Carvo, as the latter peered over his counter to note the cause of the small boy's hasty entrance. "Where's the fire?" quoth the humorous Carvo, sensing foul play, and recalling certain occasions when he turned in alarms before, at the frenzied demands of jocular infants, only to discover that the worst fire in the neighborhood was on the end of his own cigar.

The boy was insistant, however, so Carvo dispatched a runner to the scene of the reputed conflagration. A fire it was, and the alarm was duly sounded.

A strip of grass beside Cavanaugh's barn, between H and I streets, had caught fire, and the structure was beginning to smolder on one corner. The firemen extinguished the blaze in two minutes. Origin of the blazo was unknown, according to several small boys who were beating the flames when the fire-truck arrived, but it is rumored that smoke from the barn was preceeded by smoke issuing from juveniles sampling their favorite brand.

NATIONAL CANNERS UNDER FEDERAL CONTROL

Apricot growers of Washington township have been watching with interest recent progress in plans to bring the canning industries under federal supervision. Having lost money for the last several years, farmers are eager to support some sort of cooperative scheme with the canners in order to stabilize the price of orchard produce.

Officials of the National Canners' Association last Thursday declared themselves in favor of a minimum wage scale for workers as well as higher prices for the farmer. A code was drawn up that brings the canners under federal control. As members of the National Canners' Association, the Canners League of the west coast quite possibly will endorse any plans of the association.

Federal control of the canning industries means much to the farmers, in that maximum and minimum prices will be set and rigidly enforced by the government. The new supervision will prevent destructive competition between canning units, which in the past years has forced the price down as small units bought up surplus fruit at little cost, canned it, and put it on the market at ruinous prices.

Apricot farmers of California, under the leadership of Arch Wilson and Jos. Chargin, Jr., San Jose growers, have been meeting recently with the Canners League in San Francisco, in an attempt to bring the apricot industry under the same plan that regulates the peach pack. Such a plan would assure the grower of a good price for the greater percentage of his crop. The success of the plan for this season is somewhat dubious, owing to the late start in working out the details.

Among the growers who met recently with officials of the canners' league in San Francisco were C. Donovan and E. Waldron, Washington township growers.

FEDERAL RULINGS ON DRIED FRUITS HELD PERNICIOUS

Moisture Fixing of Dried Apricots Considered Detrimental

Protest is growing against federal rulings that are expected to seriously affect the marketing of California dried fruits, according to the current issue of the California Fruit News.

Terming as "unduly restrictive" the federal ruling fixing a moisture tolerance of 2 per cent for apricots, the journal reports the consensus of opinion of a recent meeting in San Jose, that it will "tend to depress values to growers and retard heavy shipping during the best shipping months of the early fall, when moisture content may be a little above the maximum tolerance. Due to the fact that moisture content is used to cleanse and sterilize the fruit, and cannot be added in undue quantities without being detrimental to the delivered product, and also must be in sufficient quantity to make the fruit attractive, it is thought that the new ruling is not necessary.

Professor R. F. Nichols, of the University of California Food Products laboratory says experiments there have proved a moisture content of 30 per cent to be proper for dried apricots.

Ralph H. Taylor, of the California Cooperatives, is quoted as saying "Government regulation gone rampant, always one of the great dangers of periods of unrest, appears to have broken out in Washington. It brings threats of serious consequences to California's huge dried fruit industry." He said the new moisture rulings are more than likely to play havoc with the growers and packers of dried fruits alike. He objected to new hazards being added to an already hazardous market.

Perhaps the most serious phase of the problem which will result from the new regulations is that growers and packers, due to the wide variation of moisture content, must cut far below the federal maximum to play safe and escape the danger of arrest and prosecution. Packers may be expected to proceed with extreme caution, slowing up business and jeopardizing thousands of tons of California dried fruits.

The grower has two courses of action; either he may strive to foil nature and comply with the new laws to the detriment of his business, or he may send determined protests to Washington against the unwarranted rulings which threaten chaos from the farm standpoint.

Instituted to "Protect the Consumer" the new regulations will ruin the apricot grower who drys his fruit. He will find that the stipulated moisture content is impossible to attain, and his produce will be seized and confiscated with warning of arrest it he does not comply to the letter of the law.

Califorinia dried fruits and especially those from Washington township, are famous for their consistent high quality. The consumer is in no need of "protection." Farmers of Washington township are already adding their protests to those of all other dried fruit industry regions in the state.

FALLS AND CUTS KNEE

Pulling lustily on a loose plank, that came away much easier than he expected, Frank Rose, purchaser and wrecker of the Essanay studio at Niles, fell last Saturday morning and cut his knee on some unidentified sharp object that was underfoot. The injury was not serious.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Fawning at the Feet of a King!

Thirteen American girls in London curtsy to a king. Thirteen girls born in the New World and rocked to sleep in the cradle of liberty, fed through their childhood on the fruits of political freedom; and, passing their 'teens, endowed with the voting franchise, purchased for them at the price of centuries of struggle and countless lives, climax the good they inherited and blessings on them bestowed, by bending the knee in abnegation to a king—a king, not by the grace of his statesmanship and usefulness to his empire, but by the the accident of birth.

Shame to them; but more shame to their parents, who are old enough to know better. Among the unlucky number of thirteen was the daughter of Ambassador Bingham, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal—the paper made famous by Henry Watterson, whose ridicule of snobbery while he lived was one of the many bright pages in the life of that noted journalist. Now, only a few years after Watterson's death, his partner's daughter kneels before a king!

Rattle brained youngsters who know their history so poorly! Do they not know—of course not—that to be an American is to be greater than any king.

Had these thirteen pampered American snobs maneuvered their political and social cards to have gotten the opportunity to have met and talked with Ramsey McDonald, Arthur Neville Chamberlain or Lloyd George, that would have been something worth while—something that they might have looked back upon with pride, and the contact with these great, self-made Englishmen would have made them even as Americans truer democrats.

Scraping and pawing before King George, personally they subscribe to the doctrine that power gained by inheritance is a nobler thing than when attained by the sheer force of personality and genius—a tenet upon which the structure of our government rests.

But then the thirteen little American butterflies did not know any better, and instead of paddling them with the slipper of democracy, their fawning parents should be taken out into the public square and the Declaration of Independence crammed down their throats, that they might masticate physically what evidently they have failed to assimulate mentally.

Such Political Harmony Can't Last

Roosevelt is now riding on the high tide of public approval. The cooperation he is getting from all factions and all parties, is commendable, but do not misunderstand it. We are not sure that it is adulation. It is induced by hope, and partly by fear. He took office under terrible business conditions. Those business conditions are still terrible, but less menacing to the government. There has been some small material improvement, and a more cheerful mental attitude is noticeable.

Some people complain that Roosevelt has been given dictatorial powers little dreamed possible a short while ago, and at total variance with our sacred constitution. That is true, but the congress that conferred those powers upon the executive will take them away if abused, or when the urgency of the situation has passed they will be withdrawn.

While there is still doubt which way things are going, as long as they grow no worse, Roosevelt will have the country with him. The minute things begin to slide—if they should—he will no longer be the hero of the hour, his every desire obeyed. That is politics. That is life.

If things gradually get better, opposition will develop in ratio to the feeling of confidence that pervades the nation. When the turning point is reached and recovery seems certain, the old partisan resistence that a president and party naturally encounter, will come to life and American political affairs will be again interestingly normal.

LABOR COMMISSION URGES GROWERS TO SET PICKING WAGE

Indefinite Wage Prices Lead to Disputes, Warning

Employers of fruit workers were warned to establish definite wage prices by George Moody, deputy labor commissioner, last week after a meeting with workers in San Francisco.

Many cherry pickers in southern Alameda county and Santa Clara county, he said, had complained that they had not received a fair price for their work. Moody announced that those who will employ apricot pickers must announce a definite price.

He told of hundreds of cases during the cherry season where the employers told the pickers that they would pay "as much as others are paying" and then refused to pay the amount at the conclusion of the work.

Such arrangements are too indefinite, Moody said, and lead to disputes over what the average pay should be.

Employers who enter into such indifinite agreements this year will be obliged to pay the highest average price, he said.

Apricot growers in Washington township should heed the warning of the labor commission, and set forth a definite price range for picking this year before the season is well under way.

CRASH ON ESCOBAR HILL INJURES DRIVERS

Fearing that he was too close to the edge of the road, H. C. Grotheer, of Salinas, suddenly swerved to the center of a curve on Escobar Hill, near Mission San Jose, last Friday afternoon, and collided head-on with the car driven by J. F. Bisig of Danville. Both drivers were rather severely cut and bruised, but their injuries are not of a serious nature.

Grotheer, who was driving from Mission San Jose, in an attempt to give ample room to approaching traffic, neared the edge of the embankment and seeing his danger swerved back into the middle of the road just as Bisig's car appeared around a turn. The crash could not be avoided.

Bisig, who is principal of the Danville High school, was taken to Pleasanton for treatment.

FAREWELL DINNER GIVEN MEMBER BY FIREMEN

Tony Mezza was guest of honor on the eve of his departure for Pleasanton, where he will made his home after several years as a resident of Niles. Mezza came to Niles from Pleasanton several years ago.

Clarence Crane, as chairman for the evening supervised the arrangements for the "bean feed," and served as master of ceremonies.

Mezza was presented with a valuable watch-chain penknife by the firemen as a farewell token in recognition of his faithful work in the department.

Mrs. Grace Guisti and daughter, Melvina, were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kallas, of Pittsburgh.

Peter

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

PETER, or as everybody called him, Pete, was big and square shouldered with that kind of red hair that seems always to have been rumpled by a stiff breeze. He was stubborn and pugnacious when there was anything to be stubborn and pugnacious about, but usually he was easy going and gentle.

Pete was as putty in the hands of Daphne Baker, but no one but he knew it. Daphne was so fragile that he thought she must have stepped from a Watteau canvas.

Sometimes Daphne treated Pete with all the sweetness in the world and sometimes she seemed to regard him as just a big, solid doormat. Pete absorbed her kindnesses and forget the rest.

Nobody but Peter knew that just outside the city limits on a sunny hill there sprawled a bungalow, with wide lawns and flower gardens and a fountain playing against the glorious distance of great trees. He pictured Daphne there, and, of course, himself somewhere close by.

Daphne had heaps of flirtations. What pretty girl has not? But always she drifted back to Pete.

He had not worried much about these affairs until the advent, on the screen, of the handsome, soulful-eyed Geoffrey Collins. Daphne simply went wild about him.

During these fascinated days Daphne looked at Pete's unruly red hair and his big useful hands and his broad grin with comparisons in her mind that did not bode well for Pete. When Pete took her across a crowded street, he simply took her arm in his strong hand, guided her swiftly and surely to where he wanted to take her and then let her go. Now, Geoffrey, on the screen, of course, would look questionably and most soulfully into the eyes of his ladylove, take her arm gently and wait most gracefully for the traffic to clear before risking his own and his ladylove's life.

And invariably when Pete took her to dinner he did all the ordering. He made her eat a huge steak, some fine vegetables and a good pudding.

"No," he declared at her protestations. "Girls require more than hearts of lettuce and sardines for dinner. You eat that—all of it." And Daphne did.

On the other hand, Geoffrey would have toyed daintily with tid-bits that might have satisfied a Persian kitten.

So, when the great announcement came that there was to be a combined society and movie garden party for the benefit of the unemployed, and that Geoffrey was to dance with all and sundry, Daphne knew that the great moments of her life were approaching. But just to make sure, she got herself appointed to the refreshments committee. It was to be a tremendous affair and the whole of the city would flock to see the favorites of the screen in varied forms of charitable performances.

"No," declared Pete, adamant in his decision, "I'd rather go fishing than doll up on a hot day like this. You put on your best frock, look your prettiest and have a dozen or so dances with the great Geoffrey." He knew Daphne was annoyed, but he wanted to give her free rein. In his heart Pete feared for the first time, for Geoffrey seemed like a man of real charm. Pete felt that his castle of dreams might tumble that day, and he went off to fish, far up the river.

Daphne was exquisite in a silvery wisp of a dress, and a wide droopy hat shadowing the deep violet of her eyes. No wonder that Geoffrey glorified in his partner when it came Daphne's turn to dance with him. Daphne's heart had pounded when she stepped forward to meet him, but no sooner were they on the floor actually dancing than she became her normal, level-headed self.

Geoffrey was delightful. He was a wonderful dancer. He gazed soulfully and respectfully into her eyes but there was the faintest bit of make-up beneath his eyes and a becoming tint of sunburn that the sun had not produced on his face. Daphne smiled softly as she finished her dance with him, then fled swiftly from the garden party. She didn't take time to change her clothes but hurried to her little roadster and drove recklessly far beyond the city limits. Then, parking her car, she walked quickly along the river bank to a tiny grove of trees with some great rocks that lay out on the river. Pete sat there fishing, but even if a whale had been on his line, there would have been no joy in it. For Pete was seeing Daphne in the arms of Geoffrey Collins.

"Peter—dear!" Daphne hurled herself into Pete's arms. There wasn't a soul in the world in sight and her white, silky arms went up clingingly about Pete's neck and she lifted her lips to be kissed.

The fishing rod floated down the river while Daphne gloried in Pete's strong arms, his rumpled hair and his rugged face with its broad grin. Pete knew his voice would tremble if he spoke, so he only tightened his grip and visualized the bungalow on the sunny hill.

Running for Office Is Not Talk With Indians

When a white man runs for office, he shakes hands, kisses the babies and makes speeches. When an Indian runs for office he literally runs. As with many American traditions, this "running for office" might be traced back to the Indian source, and with a smile, for it would be highly amusing if any of our dignified candidates followed the Indian example and actually ran for office.

Each year the Indian governors run for office and are inaugurated in the 19 pueblos of New Mexico. Each pueblo is divided into two political divisions, known sometimes as the summer and winter people, sometimes as the Turquoise and Squash people, and at Santa Clara on the banks of the Rio Grande, as the Progressives and Conservatives.

Each group chooses 20 runners as their representatives. The race starts early in the morning down a quarter-mile course beyond the adobe houses of the pueblo. The runners range from strong, young athletes to tiny boys.

As the relay race begins each runner is touched with an eagle feather that his flight may be as swift as the eagle's. The winning group chooses from the elder "wise men" the man who will be governor of the pueblo during the new year.

India Has Most Crowded Region in Entire World

The most densely populated large region of the earth is Cochin, a British Indian state, according to a dispatch. Cochin has 814 people to the square mile. (Rhode Island has 644.1 persons per square mile, Nevada 0.83, the United States 41.3.)

Results of other recent population studies:

The earth's total population is 1,820,000,000. Asia contains 954,000,000, Europe 478,000,000, North America, 162,000,000, South America 77,000,000, Africa 140,000,000, Australia and Polynesia 9,000,000. Cornell university estimates that the world's population in 1650 was 465,000,000, about one-fourth his present 1,820,000,000 estimate.

Contrary to snap judgment, all the people—red, white, black and yellow—who lived and died from 1492 until 1880 in what is now the United States, did not equal the 123,000,000 who now inhabit the United States.—Time.

Extracting Scents From Flowers

The enfleurage method of extracting scents from flowers for perfume making is a process of extracting perfumes by exposing absorbents, as fixed oils or fats, to the inhalations of the flowers. It is used with plants whose volatile oils are too delicate to be separated by distillation. In the Bermuda perfume industry the flowers are kept in almost air-tight contact with a pure preparation of mutton lard called pomade, which, being odorless in itself, readily picks up the scent of flowers exposed to it. When the saturation point is reached the pomade is dissolved in wine alcohol, which in its turn absorbs the flower odor. The greasy substance still in the alcohol is removed by freezing. Fixatives (ingredients necessary to give perfume its lasting quality and also its "life" or diffusiveness) are added, and the perfume is ready for bottling.

Plenty of Coal Below Ground

The United States geological survey recently estimates that this country has a remaining supply of about 3,189,000,000,000 net tons. These coal beds are the carbon remains of vegetation which flourished in a past geological era when climate was much milder than it now is. High temperatures and humidity in that prehistoric time permitted ferns to grow as large as trees, and plant life of many varieties was prolific. Most of the coal fields of the United States are believed known. Estimates of coal reserves are limited to those no deeper than 3,000 feet below the earth's surface. We need not worry that our coal reserves will be exhausted during our lifetime.

Poison and Medicine

A group of compounds which play an important part in medicine and at the same time are highly poisonous in too great quantity are alkaloids, favorite poisons of the fiction writers who center their plots around the scientific killers who slay their victims with subtle poisons. Many of the alkaloids are common products in use daily in homes everywhere, such as theine, found in coffee and tea. Other commonly known alkaloids include morphine, quinine, strychnine, atropin, cocaine and others of like nature. All contain hydrogen, carbon and nitrogen, and many contain oxygen as well.—Washington Star.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

It was when Rudolph Bischoff, now of New York's Westbury, ran the Trianon palace, at Versailles, that there arrived a short man, with a pointed, reddish beard and a head as free from hair as a large, pink pearl. Adjacent to his Roman nose, a monocle nestled in his left eye. The visitor was Gabriele d'Annunzio, Italian novelist, playwright, poet and patriot, and he said he was looking for quiet. A suite, which looked out upon flat country, veiled by autumn fog, satisfied him. All he wanted then was the largest writing table which could be procured, a reading lamp, a stand to hold a large bowl of water containing a solitary goldfish, a daily vase of flowers, and some light bulbs of red, green, blue and yellow.

"I like," he explained, "to change the color of my room in accordance with my moods."

* * *

After the things he requested had been provided he went to work and wrote his first play in French verse, for Ida Rubinstein, the famous Russian, whose beauty and dancing perhaps exceeded her acting and French pronunciation. The play concerned the martyrdom of St. Sebastian and Ida Rubinstein appeared in the title role, with scanty raiment to protect her from the arrows. After the play was produced, d'Annunzio went somewhere in the Pyrenees. Before leaving Versailles, he commended his lonely goldfish to the care of Mrs. Bischoff, begging her to have the bowl removed to her own apartment.

* * *

But it became evident that the mind of the fish fancier was not at ease. A week after his departure, Mr. Boschoff received a telegram. It said that d'Annunzio had a presentiment that the fish was dying and asked for a report on its health. Mr. Bischoff went to see the goldfish, found it in excellent health and spirits, and wired to that effect. Twenty minutes later he received a summons from his wife. He found her in a state of agitation, looking at a flat and motionless goldfish. There appeared to be no explanation, but the fish certainly was dead. Mr. Bischoff calmed his wife, disposed of the fish in the most convenient manner, and sent another wire containing the sad news and his condolences.

* * *

Back came another telegram from d'Annunzio. It thanked Mr. Bischoff for his sympathy and asked him to bury the goldfish in the garden. This was a tall order, as the fish was now beyond recall. Mr. Bischoff told his troubles to his head waiter, an Italian named Galvinni, a large man with a sense of humor. Galvinni said that all would be well. He secured a large sardine from the chef, wrapped it in cotton, put it in a box, and buried it in the garden. Above it was placed a marker, bearing the somewhat inaccurate statement that this was the resting place of the pet goldfish of Gabriele d'Annunzio. Two weeks later, d'Annunzio returned and asked to be shown the grave. He read the inscription and was satisfied.

* * *

In some ways this is reminiscent of the Manhattan man and the canary bird, to which his wife was extremely attached. When it expired of old age, she packed it in a box and insisted that her husband go out and bury it. His idea was to toss the box in a garbage can, but every time he started to carry out that idea he imagined that passers-by were viewing him with deep suspicion. He knew that their suspicion would be even deeper if they saw him trying to bury something in a vacant lot, such lots in New York resident districts being few and usually flanked by windows. So he walked out on the Queensborough bridge, started to throw the box into the East river, and was seized by an alert policeman. He returned home minus the canary, but with a state of mind which lasted for a week.

* * *

When Police Inspector Matt McGrath left County Tipperary, his male parent was much prejudiced against all forms of athletics, which he described as wasteful and exhausting nonsense. But when Matt McGrath won the Olympic hammer throw and returned to visit his Irish home, the old man drew him aside.

"You must know," he said, "that you take after your father's family."

A number of New York financial institutions would like to get out of the moving picture business, but are in the situation of the hunter who climbed after the bear, caught it, and besought his companion to come up and help him let go.

"Drowned" Rivers

In physical geography the term "drowned" is applied to land which has been submerged by water either by raising the water or sinking the land. The term is particularly applied to rivers the lower courses of which valleys have been converted into estuaries by raising the water.

GRAFT LEG NERVES TO CURE PARALYSIS

Restores Expression and Facial Muscle Control.

New York.—A highspeed method of grafting living human nerves from the leg to the face, enabling the victims of facial paralysis to recovery from three to eight times more rapidly than under former treatments, has been announced by the Millbank Memorial fund.

The new method restores emotional expression as well as control of muscles. It has been developed by Dr. Arthur B. Duel of this city and Sir Charles Ballance of London.

The experimenting was done with animals, but 17 human beings already have been operated on successfully by Doctor Duel, and three of these in one month showed signs of returning nerve control previously not noted in less than three to eight months.

A sensory nerve is taken from the patient's leg and spliced in much the same way as a rope into the deadened section of the facial nerve. The leg loses some of its "feeling" temporarily.

To speed up the growth of the transplanted nerve in its new surroundings, it is treated in advance while still in the leg, much as seeds are treated in scientific methods of speeding up agricultural growth.

This advance treatment consists in severing the leg nerve and then leaving it still in the leg for two or three weeks, during which it rids itself of some of its own "detritus," or parts, a necessary preliminary to its further growth. Then, when it is ready to start growing, it is placed in the face.

Ghost Towns of Death Valley Coming to Life

Death Valley, Calif.—Ghost towns of the Death Valley country are again quickening to life.

This was the word brought back by Kathryn Ronan of Furnace Creek inn, located on the floor of the valley. Miss Ronan recently completed a tour of the entire district, visiting abandoned mining camps in the Funeral range, the Panamint mountains and across the line in Nevada.

"Rhyolite, once a town of 10,000 people, and later entirely deserted, is again being used as a base by prospectors," she reported. "Men thrown out of work by the depression are returning to the old camps and are again working over the deserted shafts hunting new veins and pockets."

The Death valley region is studded with abandoned camps. Most of them date to the '90s and early days of the century.

Rhyolite, Nev., was the largest of all. Panamint City, founded by the robbers of the Wells Fargo Express company, in San Francisco; Greenwater, Furnace, Schwaub, Skidoo, Harrisburg and Ballarat were others. Greenwater was the only ghost town in the valley proper. The majority were located in the surrounding mountain ranges that rise 6,000 to 10,000 feet sheer from the below-sea-level floor of Death valley.

Ship Radio Rings Bells When SOS Is Received

Trieste.—A new SOS wireless receiving set was tried out successfully aboard the liner Gange between Venice and Trieste. The device causes electric bells to ring in the wireless room and the captain's cabin when an SOS is picked up.

Leads Population Rise

Warsaw.—Poland's increase of population of 1932 was greater than that of any other European country, figures available recently showed. The population increased more than 500,000 during the year, which was 200,000 more than Germany's increase, with a population almost double Poland's.

Computing Distances

The terms "easy walking distance" and "easy motoring distance" are relative. As an hour's walk is not considered difficult for the average person, any distance that may be covered within that time at a three-mile pace is generally accepted as easy walking distance. Similarly, a distance that may be covered by motor in three or four hours at an average speed of 25 to 30 miles an hour may be taken as easy motoring distance.

learns, are one of the fruits of irrigation. In them millions of tons of beets that grow in the surrounding fields are turned each year into hundreds of millions of pounds of sugar. In 1930 Colorado factories produced nearly a third of all the sugar produced in the United States.

This white, crystalline gold from Colorado's plains has been worth in excess of $50,000,000 in a single year, more than ten times the value of the yellow gold that was dug in 1931 from the mountains.

NATIVES USE PLANT TO PRESERVE TEETH

But Its Discoverer Says It Turns Them Black.

Chicago.—A plant that allegedly prevents tooth decay has just been brought to the Smithsonian institution by Dr. W. A. Archer, American botanist and explorer of the rain-drenched jungles of the Choco region of northwestern Colombia. The plant was identified as a new species of Schradera, a member of the coffee family. It is being described as a new species by P. C. Standley of the Field museum, the recognized authority on this family. Archer found it in use among the hitherto almost unknown Citara tribe of Choco Indians.

These aboriginals, Archer says, insist that it is a perfect tooth preservative. The children chew the leaves until a film of some sort is formed over the teeth. Adults chew them about twice a year to restore any worn-off parts of the film.

Turns Teeth Black.

Whether the plant does all that is claimed for it, Archer says, cannot be determined without extensive investigation. It is a fact, he claims, that the Citara have almost perfect teeth. Skulls of past generations also show intact teeth with no signs of decay.

Even if some substance derived from the plant should prove a perfect tooth preservative there is one slight drawback to its introduction in dental practice—it turns the teeth almost jet black. Among the Citara, however, black teeth are considered objects of beauty, and white teeth would be viewed almost as a deformity. And, Archer points out, the preference of one color to another in teeth is largely a matter of education.

Another jungle plant hitherto unknown to science brought to the Smithsonian by Archer is described by the explorer as bearing a fruit which might be "like the original apple of the Garden of Eden." It is known only by its scientific name, Siparuna archeri.

Fruits Burst Open.

Its discoverer describes it as a shrub about 10 feet high which blooms with an abundance of pale green orchid-like flowers. These develop into fruits approximately the size of small pears with brilliant red cheeks. When dead ripe the fruits burst open and a strong lemon odor comes from them.

Although there is a strong temptation to eat some of these lovely fruits, Archer says, the jungle negroes believe them to be highly poisonous to animals. The nature of the poison is unknown. The shrub might be highly decorative in greenhouses, Archer believes.

Still another curiosity of the jungles, specimens of which were brought back by Archer, is the "kerosene tree." The natives tap it and use the sap in lamps like kerosene.

Wyoming Farm "Hands" Are Found Highly Paid

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Wyoming farm "hands" receive the highest wages paid in nine representative western and midwestern states, a recent survey indicated.

"Hired help," however, did not exactly get rich working on the farms of this state last fall. The average "hand" received board, room and $25.25 a month, as compared to the board, room and $53 a month he received in 1928 and 1929. In 1930, the wage had dropped to $47.75, and in 1931 to $35.50.

Despite the $10 a month reduction from the 1931 wage, the farm worker in this state received $5.50 more a month than did men doing similar work in Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas and Wisconsin. The average pay in those states was $19.80.

Only one of the eight states paid its farm hands more in 1928 than did Wyoming. That state was North Dakota, where in boom times farmer workers were paid $54.25 and board and room. This year the North Dakota worker received $20.50 a month, or $4.75 less than his fellow workmen in Wyoming.

City People Flocking to Georgia Farmhouses

Valdosta, Ga.—The migration of city people to the soil has been in such numbers that not a habitable farmhouse in the Valdosta area is vacant. Every building fit for dwelling shelters a family. Many have no means of financing a crop or even feeding themselves until harvest, but they express confidence of eking out a better living than in the cities.

In numerous instances migrators moved into vacant houses without even troubling to find out who owned them. Once domiciled, they set about to drive a bargain with the landlord.

Summing It Up

Life is what it always has been, and always will be. No use to make a fuss.

Breath Count Is Made on Cars in Power Test

An automobile engine, like a human being, must breathe while running. The average rate of human breathing is about eighteen breaths per minute. Engineers of motor car companies have found that a 12-cylinder engine breathes 24,000 times a minute while traveling at 80 miles an hour. An eight-cylinder motor breathes 16,000 times a minute at the same speed.

With man, muscles of the chest contract the lungs, expelling the air. The muscles then relax, permitting air to rush in from outside and fill the void or vacuum.

In an automobile engine the pistons rise on the exhaust stroke, expelling the air from the cylinders. They then descend on the intake stroke, creating a void or vacuum as they do down. This void is filled by air rushing in from outside, just as in the human breathing process. However, in the case of the automobile engine the incoming air picks up gasoline in the carburetor on the way to the cylinders, or "lungs."

The engineers in studying motor "breathing" found that air rushes into the cylinder with hurricane force. It actually has a speed of 74 miles an hour in a car traveling at 80 miles an hour.

The velocity of this air, or rather mixture of air and gasoline, has been utilized to obtain in cars an increase in power with no additional gasoline or engine wear through higher motor speed. The engines actually do not have to revolve as many times as before in covering a mile, it has been found.—Detroit News.

Prehistoric Tools Are Unearthed in Germany

In the so-called Mosbach sand, a deposit from the Main and Rhine in the Diluvian epoch, Professor Schmidtgen, director of the Mainz (Germany) Museum of Natural History, found bone tools which date from the days of the homo heidelbergenisis, whose jawbone, found in the same stratum in Mauer, near Heidelberg, some decades ago, is the oldest known human remains, writes a correspondent in the New York World-Telegram.

The finds include a dagger-shaped tool made from the shinbone of an elephant, and a similar tool from the hind leg of a wild horse.

The age of the deposit in which they were found is estimated at from 600,000 to 700,000 years. A lion's skull, found near Wallertheim, Rhenish Hessin, can be pretty definitely established as from 116,000 to 117,000 years old. All have been placed in the Mainz museum.

Harrison's Inauguration

Nathan Sargent, one of the earliest of the Washington correspondents, who wrote under the name of "Jonathan Oldstyle," says that General Harrison preferred riding on horseback, in his Presidential procession, and "that, too, without an overcoat or gloves, although the weather was excessively disagreeable, a sharp, cold northeast wind prevailing the whole day." In delivering his inaugural address, General Harrison "stood bareheaded without overcoat, with bare hands, facing the keen northeaster, a full hour and a half, everyone but himself suffering from exposure to the piercing blasts."

Foxes in Tree Watch Hunt

Unnoticed, three foxes perched in a tree, watching the preparations and start of a fox hunt of the North Cheshire hounds at Walton Hill, England, recently. The incident is declared to be unprecedented in English fox hunting. When the furred spectators were noticed the entire program was immediately changed. Hounds were withdrawn some distance, and when a whip was cracked one of the foxes jumped to the ground and fled, with the hounds in full cry. He escaped and the other two waited until the hunters were gone, then slipped away from the tree.

A Dictionary Feast

Never let go of a dictionary without getting more than you went to it for. This is one place where playing the hog pays handsomely, and it is not just mere selfishness. It is always possible, no matter how great a hurry one is in, to drop the eye down and take in the meaning of another word. Often the chain thus begun will roll one back into past centuries, for our great modern dictionaries are filled with interesting facts, not just words and meanings alone.

First Governor of Virginia

The first man to actually hold the title of "governor" of Virginia was Lord Delaware. He was appointed by the London company, whose charter lasted 18 years. Delaware was appointed in 1609 and was to hold office for life, but he died in 1618. However, Lord Delaware lived in Virginia only nine months of the nine years he held that office. The rest of the time he was represented by a deputy.

Families Shrink; Baby Buggies Not in Demand

Out of 30,000,000 American families more consist of two persons than of any other number. There are 7,000,000 domestic groups of this size. Only about one in six or seven of them are newly married couples with a baby around the corner, for the yearly number of marriages is not much more than 1,000,000, observes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. "Just Molly and me, and the baby makes three," ran a song popular a short time back. But the dwindling birth rate indicates that baby is being deferred.

These families of two help pull down the average size to 4.01, as revealed by the 1930 census. Since 1900 the average American family has lost about .75 of a member, a statistical member who can be neatly dissected for tabular purposes. But when servants and lodgers are counted out, the current average family is down to 3.81.

Economic and social pressure is making it tough for the makers of baby carriages. However, there is some hope. There are still more than 3,000,000 families of seven or more members.

Egyptians and Chinese Made Jig-Saw Puzzles

The oldest mechanical puzzles of which there is any record are those of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese, both similar to the jig-saw puzzle. The Chinese puzzle is known as the tangram and consists of a square of wood or other material cut into five triangles, of different sizes, a small square and a lozenge, which can be placed to form more than 300 different figures. This puzzle is sometimes made of ivory, carved with the delicate figures for which Chinese craftsmen are renowned, and is inclosed in a carved box. Out of these ancient arts has grown the jig-saw puzzle, which has gone through numerous stages by way of colored maps, and similar studies, all of which have been popular in a modified form for many years. The jig-saw puzzle was originated several years ago by an eastern toy maker. The original puzzle consisted of colored pictures pasted on laminated bass or fir wood, sawed out by hand. Later the die-cut type puzzle, stamped out at a high rate of speed, appeared and contributed to the popularity of the diversion.

District of Columbia's Seal

Fertilizing Fish Ponds

Tests by the biological board of Canada at St. Stephen, N. B., indicate that water may be "fertilized" so as to increase the plant and animal life within it, making it capable of sustaining a much larger fish population. A pond or lake which has not many fish may lack sufficient food for them. By the addition of but a single pound of herring meal to a thousand gallons of water a pond was made so fertile that it produced nearly a hundred times as many plant growths as developed in a similar quantity of unfertilized water. The increase in fish food brought about an increase of fishes.

Progress of U. S. Mail

In President Madison's time the postal rates were changed. Single letters were carried for from 8 to 25 cents, depending upon distance. Sunday delivery was arranged in 1810, and various religious bodies continued to protest to congress against the "sacrilege" during the ensuing 20 years. Mails were first carried by steamboat in 1813. New rates were placed in effect in 1816—letters, consisting of one piece of paper, not going over 30 miles, 6 cents; not over 80 miles, 10 cents; not over 150 miles, 12½ cents; not over 400 miles, 18¾ cents; for greater distances, 25 cents. These prices remained in force until 1845.

Old Graves Found

Believed to be five thousand years old, a grave has been discovered on a farm near Oyne, Scotland. Dr. Graham Callander, director of the National Museum of Antiquities at Edinburgh, reports that the body had been placed in a crouching position, as was the custom during the early Bronze age, possibly 1800 B. DRUNK DRIVING LANDS MAN IN COUNTY JAIL

Arrested Monday night for driving his automobile while he was in a decidely intoxicated condition, Pablo Huorta, of Alvarado, was Wednesday sentenced to 30 days in the county jail by Judge J. A. Silva at the Niles courthouse.

Huorta pled guilty to the charges. Nightwatchman Glick, of Decoto, noticing the erratic manner in which Huorta's car was being driven, followed it toward Alvarado along the Whipple Road. He reports that Huorta was unable to guide his machine between the ramps of a small bridge, and crashed into one of them. Glick drew alongside and asked what the trouble was. He was answered by a thick, "Don't know." Huorta was taken into custody.

Huorta stated later that he had been to a party, and had had a splendid evening. He had recently purchased his car, and had no operator's card.

ELKS BEAT FORDS IN 10 INNING CONTEST

Leading by a score of 7 to 6 at the first half of the 9th inning Sunday, the Hodgkins Fords lost in ten frames to the Alameda Elks at Alameda. Looking like sure victors until the 7th inning, the Fords blew up with a crash, and dropped a game they should have won. They were pounding the seed throughout the initial innings in a fashion that spelled doom for the Elks, until the latter outfit found Spud Dagermark for a few timely hits.

Hitting honors for the Fords were captured by Lebon, Faria and Smith, who all got three bingles out of five tries.

Spud Dagermark pitched his usual good game, holding the Elks to a few scattered hits until his support exploded.

FICTITIOUS FIRE FOOLS FIREMEN FOURTH OF JULY

Startled from their Fourth of July festivities by the blare of the fire siren at about 7:30 Tuesday evening, the Centerville firemen bounded to the fire house and clambered aboard the engines, eager for the battle. "Thar she blows," yelped the firemen, pointing to a dull crimson splash on the horizon, as the trucks sirened through the dusk. Arriving at the scene, the firemen swore long and fearful sentences, for there before their dissapointed gaze was a dubious bon-fire, carefully ended by a farmer who was much more surprised than the fire-fighters. "Who turned in that alarm?" muttered the department members, as they tested the keenness of their fire-axes.

SERUM TO RESTORE PEP TO THE WEARY

Norwegian Finds a Substance to Dispel Fatigue.

Oslo.—A serum that may dispel tiredness in human beings has been discovered.

Such is the claim of a Norwegian physician, Dr. Mentz von Krogh, who has spent several years as medical professor in Argentina where he experimented for a considerable time with the problem of removing the human feeling of tiredness. His previous work of discovering a rejuvenation tonic brought him up against the problem of inventing an anti-tiredness serum.

The experiments have now reached a stage where the Norwegian scientist holds that he can bring the results before the public eye, in a lecture he explained how he first tried his serum on himself and with surprisingly promising results.

Serum Lifts Fatigue.

During his stay at an Argentine university he experimented with the serum which he calls antikenotoksine under particularly favorable conditions. After a swimming competition during which the participants had exerted themselves to the utmost the doctor injected the serum underneath the skin of the young men, and after the lapse of a couple of hours they were all freed of tiredness.

"The serum consists of the same substance," Dr. Von Krogh declared, "that the human body produces in order to expel the tiredness substances. In a young and strong individual the capacity for developing this substance in a natural way will always be greater than in older human bodies.

Will Be Tested Now.

"With very old people the serum will be of no effect, more likely proving to be harmful. Nor will it mean much to very young people, but to the intermediate stages of human life it will cause a strikingly favorable effect. On an average ten injections will be needed, and the effect will then be noticeable for a long period, often reaching several years. The injections have no harmful after-effects."

Professor Von Krogh is looked upon here as a serious and reliable medical scholar, and the results of his experiments will now be tested by the scientific authorities of Norway.

The Chaco

The Chaco is a vast forest region situated on the right bank of the Paraguay river between Paraguay and Bolivia. Bolivia was unfortunate enough to lose her Pacific sea coast as a result of her bad judgment in entering the war of the 80s between Peru and Chile. As a consequence the Chaco would be valuable to her since it would give her an Atlantic seaport on the Paraguay river. It is important to Paraguay for the same reason, although Paraguay already has such a seaport, being situated on the left bank of the river. It is because of its economical and commercial importance that the Chaco has become a bone of contention between the two republics. Its resources are practically untouched and it has no population to speak of.

Colorado's Story

Prepared by National Geographic Society Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THREE additional "primitive areas" have just been set aside by the federal government in the mountains of Colorado to serve as vacation regions for those who wish to enjoy outings in the real wilderness. The designation has been made so that there will remain, even after further development of highways and railways, parts of the rugged mountains untouched by the hand of man, a region free from concrete, steel, and even the wires of power lines and telephones. Each of the districts will in addition be a natural preserve for wild animal life.

Seventy-five years ago all of Colorado was a wilderness through which only a handful of trappers had wandered. The region which is now the state constituted a real barrier. Its vast eastern plains formed a typical part of the Great American desert, that geographic libel thrust onto American maps by forest-minded pioneers, there to stay for two generations.

And beyond the "desert" rose an immense rampart of "impenetrable" peaks with barren, rocky crowns. Appalling sights they were to men who had grown up among the friendly, rounded verdure-blanketed mountains of the East.

So it came about that the early rush of trade and emigration that beat out paths to the West passed Colorado by. Its mountain barrier split this westward faring tide of humanity as a huge bowlder in midstream cleaves the waters of a river. The Santa Fe trail turned to the south, traversing only the southeast corner of the area that was to become Colorado. The covered wagons of emigrants Oregon-bound in the early forties, the great hegira of thousands of Mormons in '47 and '48, and the rush of the California forty-niners passed chiefly to the north. Save for a handful of white trappers, Colorado was left to its few bands of wandering savages.

But not for long. Gold, always a magnet for men, dragged a horde of fortune seekers to the edge of the mountains almost over night in '58 and '59, and soon sent restless prospectors with picks and pans scurrying like ants over the whole mountain area. They found the mountain region was not a land of arctic waste and icy solitudes. On the slopes of bare-topped peaks were noble forests; between were smiling valleys with grassy meadows.

"Desert" Now a Rich Region.

Here and there the valleys widened into spacious parks. Streams gurgled on every side, alive with fish. The forests teemed with game.

Into this land of unexpected beauty trickled the van of the emigrants, some to find other goods than gold. The barrier had had its first real breach.

The "desert" now is a land of growing crops and fat cattle, crisscrossed by highways and railroads. Farther west the vigorous pioneers and their brothers in spirit who have followed after have thrust railways through gorges, even hanging them on artificial shelves from sheer precipices.

They have gouged their way through the Continental divide and lesser ranges to construct long tunnels; and over the great sea of mountains, along the routes of Indian trails and the crude early roads of the miners, that clung precariously to steep slopes, they have flung an amazing network of modern highways.

Now, on any summer's day, on the heights which early pessimists called cheerless polar solitudes, one may see the gayly colored frocks of women and children fluttering from scurrying automobiles. They belong to visiting family parties, on picknicking bent, who are whisked over the mountain roads in a continuous stream. The once impassable mountains are a fair mark now for the wheeziest flivver.

The story of Colorado's swift development in the short space of one lifetime is crammed with romance, tragedy, and high adventure, with strokes of good fortune and ill, as are few chapters in the national chronicle.

One day the region was raw, virtually untouched by civilization. The next, almost, men were starting to make a state out of thin mountain air and dusty sagebrush flats; were selling town lots at auction; issuing newspapers; building homes, churches, saloons, and theaters; organizing stage-coach companies; talking politics!

Good Motor Roads.

As you explore Colorado's mountain region, rich alike in gold and superb scenery, you find excellent motor roads penetrating the roughest terrain. The state's mountain highway system has opened up this region of tumbled peaks only in recent years. Twenty years ago the state's "summer land" consisted almost exclusively of the foothill country and the eastern slopes of the front range.

Now, with four excellent main highways crossing the Continental divide and with a network of minor roads and trails available, increasing numbers of the holiday crowds are pushing into the back country, where the scenic beauties are more marked.

Gold was only the curtain-raiser for the amazing drama of minerals that has unfolded in Colorado. Silver was discovered in paying quantities six years after the gold rush. Four years later, in 1868, more ounces of silver were produced than gold, and this has been the case ever since.

When Leadville's bonanza silver mines came into heavy production, in 1879, the dollar value of the silver mined each year actually passed that of gold. Colorado had become primarily a silver state. One reason for the tremendous production of silver in Colorado—an average of more than 300 tons of it a year—is the complex nature of the state's ores. Many contain mixtures of gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc. Thus silver has been a by-product in numerous properties and has often paid the freight for gold.

Tin and aluminum, cadmium and cobalt, manganese, mercury, and molybdenum, antimony and arsenic, zinc and zircon—dip almost where you will into the alphabet of minerals and you will find substances mined or minable in Colorado. Some deposits are awaiting a turn in economic conditions before they can be touched. Others have had their day.

Just now Colorado is sitting on top of the molybdenum world. A mine at Climax, near Leadville, is turning out ore that produces each year several million pounds of this rare metal that makes steel of our steel age tougher, stronger and harder. From this one mine comes more than four-fifths of the entire world output of molybdenum. Vanadium, another rare and valuable metal used in steel manufacture, is flowing from a mine at Rifle, in western Colorado. This is one of the largest vanadium mines in existence and yields one-fifth of the world supply.

Beside precious and rare metals, coal may seem a grimy interloper, but it is mineral king of Colorado. It passed gold a few years ago. Close to three-quarters of a billion dollars' worth has been dug during the state's life.

Saved by Irrigation.

Irrigation was the savior of Colorado. Most of the treasure seekers who went out in '59 and '60 had only the desire to collect gold quickly and return to the East. It was believed that the country could not support a permanent population. But a few men planted gardens in the river bottoms, led water to them in crude ditches, and obtained astonishing yields.

Co-operative groups built larger ditches at higher levels and threw up diversion dams. Development has gone on until now every one of the many streams that flow from the mountains is taken bodily over by irrigators as soon as it reaches the foothills.

As one drives through the highly developed irrigated region north and west of Denver, one comes every few miles to great factories of steel and glass, each dominated by a tall smokestack. These, one

One Hundred New York Concerns Using System.

New York.—Endless chain selling enterprises, operating from this city, have spread from Broadway to Main street, and are keeping postal authorities busy. So far there has been no decision on their legality, but it was learned that the government is investigating all chain schemes, operating through the mails, which has been called to its attention.

There are at least 100 get-rich-quick chain selling schemes, being operated from New York city, according to information from the National Better Business bureau. Some are conducted by honest business men, other by fly-by-night concerns, and a few are nothing less than rackets.

Fountain pens, hosiery, pocketbooks, golf balls, kitchen gadgets, razor blades, food supplies, jewelry, watches, men's white flannel trousers, and even real estate have been set forth as the mediums of "awakening America" and insuring the return of happy days.

Glib Promoters.

Glib promoters have demonstrated mathematically how the ninth step in the chain selling scheme will net every participant a commission of $19,301.25, with the original sale of only four pieces of merchandise. What will happen when everyone has bought a wallet or a pair of socks has been ignored by the promoters.

Women's bridge clubs in Westchester and on Long Island have been working for the chain sellers. Charitable organizations have participated in the various "make a million" schemes, and the telephones in the Better Business Bureau, both national and local, have been ringing with inquiries concerning legitimacy of the different schemes. The only advice either bureau has to offer was that "nobody knows yet whether it is legal or not, but that the participants were not likely to make any great amount of money."

Neither bureau has endorsed any of the schemes. The Better Business bureau of New York city, with offices at 280 Broadway, has found it difficult to draw the line.

Plenty of Inquiries.

"Some of the chain sellers are honest business men," said H. J. Kenner, "while others are operating shady, tricky concerns. We have received no complaints but we have been flooded with inquiries. It is not a new scheme, for I recall such methods of salesmanship were popular in 1912. We have not yet seen where we can make a complaint against the plan as a whole."

C. H. Claraban, postal inspector in charge of the New York office, said investigation of endless chain-selling organizations was a long drawnout job. He pointed out that each concern had to be investigated individually, given a public hearing, and then frequently the case had to be carried through the courts.

Here's how it operates: The participant buys an article for $2.50 and 10 cents in stamps and then sells four articles at the same price, making a commission of $1.25 on the fourth sale. Thereafter the agent sells three other articles, making $3.75. His three customers sell three each and the original participant gets $33.75 in commissions and the others are ready to start their profit sharing. By the ninth step the total commissions amount to more than $12,000 if the chain remains unbroken.

Expedition Finds Bust of a Pharaoh

Cairo.—Discovery of a bust of the Egyptian King Amenophis, who ruled in the Fourteenth century, B. C., and whose introduction of sun worship was branded as heresy by his successor, Tut-Ankh-Amen, was announced recently by excavators of the Egyption Exploration society working near Tel El-Amarna.

The expedition also discovered a life-size bust of Queen Nefertiti and a group showing the "Ape of Thoth" as the recorder who weighed souls in the underworld.

The explorations were made difficult because Tut-Ankh-Amen ordered the works of the "heretic" Amenophis obliterated and caused large areas in the Amarna district to be covered with cement.

Another archeological expedition at Abusimbel discovered the tomb of an Ethiopian tribal chief of the late Roman period and the remains of two Nubian slaves, who had been sacrificed to serve as guards inside the tomb.

Coolidge Was Religious

Calvin Coolidge was of Puritan descent. A great influence in his life was Amherst college, where he was graduated in 1895. A long list of civic offices in Massachusetts brought him at Harding's death to the Presidency of the United States. He sought re-election and it was granted. A man of plain, unpretending temperament, he appeared to personify the New England virtues. While President he joined the Congregational church, which for years he had attended. He went to service at the First Congregational church in Washington, and on occasion to Washington cathedral and elsewhere. "The strength of our country," he wrote, "is the strength of its religious convictions."

Cleveland Read Everything

Grover Cleveland is understood to have been the only President in the memory of anyone associated with the White House who read every line and word of every communication and bill from the congress. Other Presidents since then have merely "looked over" these reports and bills, and left the reading of every word to departmental heads and other assistants.

Reckless Driver Found Guilty at Pleasanton Court

Through the cooperation and quick work on the part of the constables of Pleasanton and Livermore, Carl Huntsley, giving his address as San Francisco, was caught and sentenced to sixty days in the county jail on a charge of reckless driving, when he appeared before Judge Charles A. Gale, at the Pleasanton Justice Court recently.

Huntsley was arrested on a warrant sworn to by Ambrose Rivolta, of Pleasanton, charging reckless driving. Huntsley is said to have run into the car of Rivolta at the corner of Ray and Main streets in Pleasanton recently and escaped before Rivolta had a chance to get him. Rivolta got the license plate number and gave it to Constable Vervais, who in turn gave it to Consable Van Patten, of Livermore.

Last Thursday Van Patten saw the car with the same license number in Livermore, and questioned the man, who in turn denied being the man wrecked Rivolta. Van Patten held the car and then called Rivolta to Livermore to identify the suspect. Rivolta made the identification and swore to the warrant.

GRASS BURNING BY FIREMEN NEARS END THIS WEEK

Acording to Chief Tony Alves, work of the fire department in burning grass off the vacant lots within the city limits is progressing steadily. Owners of the property have been prompt in cleaning up the grass around buildings and fences in accordance with the firemen's specifications.

Beginning last Monday night, the firemen had cleaned away several hazards by the end of the week. The fire between H and I streets last Friday is exactly what the department is striving against. Had the flames caught in the dep,dry grass on an adjoining lot, the results may have been much more serious.
